‘The Boys’ Alum Claudia Doumit Latest To Join ‘M3GAN’ Spin-Off ‘SOULM8TE’

EXCLUSIVE: After a three-season run on Prime Video’s hit series The Boys, Claudia Doumit has found her next big project in SOULM8TE, Atomic Monster and Blumhouse‘s new film out of the M3GAN universe.

Details as to the role Doumit is playing are under wraps. She’s set to star opposite previously announced leads Lily Sullivan and David Rysdahl.

Falling in the tradition of ’90s domestic thrillers but with a modern, technological twist, the film watches as a man (Rysdahl) acquires an Artificially Intelligent android (Sullivan) to help him cope with the recent loss of his deceased wife. In an attempt to create a truly sentient partner, the man inadvertently turns a harmless lovebot into a deadly soulmate.

The Boys' Claudia Doumit Saw Victoria Neuman's Plot Twist Coming

In a way, Victoria's legacy is her daughter, who is also super-abled. Zoe witnesses Butcher kill her mom—do you think she'll follow in her mom's footsteps and align with Homelander to avenge your death?

That's a good theory! It's really sad because her one desire for her daughter is for her to not end up having the kind of childhood that she did, where she grew up at Red River without a home and without parents. At the end of the season, it feels like that's exactly where her daughter is headed.

> "It feels a bit like I'm being asked to give my own eulogy."

‘The Boys’ Star on How Finale Assassination Changes Everything for Season 5

Doumit speaks below to THR about the end of Neuman; why her character made the decisions she did in her mostly hidden Supe life; and what she thinks the implications of her character’s death will mean when the series returns for its final run with season five. (Editor’s note: This conversation took place last week, prior to the shooting at Trump’s campaign rally in Pennsylvania that left two people dead, including the gunman.)

So, Victoria Neuman didn’t know Sister Sage (Susan Heyward) was using her, right? And basically, Neuman’s death caused the dismantling of The Boys.

No, Sister Sage is the smartest woman in the world! (Laughs) I think her death triggers a lot, I would anticipate, for next season. I don’t know what. But you can see it causes a fracture in the relationship between Butcher and Hughie, and I don’t know if they can come back from that.

‘The Boys’ Actor Claudia Doumit on Victoria Neuman’s ‘Twisted’ Finale Shocker

Doumit said it was only when she went back to her trailer that the realization hit her that “there was no next scene” for her. “And it was this beautiful, bittersweet moment.”

Following Neuman’s death, which is a result of her finally coming to her former employee Hughie (whom Doumit says Neuman actually “deeply cares for,” and is “probably the only real friend that she’s had in her entire adult life”), her daughter is taken to Red River Institute. The Vought-run supe orphanage is a place of significance for Neuman, since that’s where she spent the early part of her childhood before being adopted by former Vought CEO Stan Edgar (Giancarlo Esposito). The tragic twist is in part because Neuman gave her daughter Compound V and super powers to give her what she believed to be an extra layer of protection in the world.

‘The Boys’ Star Claudia Doumit Thinks Victoria’s Fate Is a ‘Cautionary Tale’

How much of Victoria’s story did you know about when you signed on in Season 2?

From the moment I joined this show, I thought she was going to die. Not because anyone told me but because I knew what show I was coming on to. I honestly thought it would be sooner. I just feel lucky that I spent as much time on the show that I did. I came on at the end of Season 2 and I thought OK, I’ll have a few episodes and they’ll kill me. Then came Season 3, and I thought OK I’ll have a few episodes and they’ll kill me, and they didn’t.

By the time it actually came around I had already mourned the death of my character. I remember Eric [Kripke] calling me halfway through the season. His assistant got in touch with me that day and said “Hey, I’ve got Eric here, do you think you’d be available in the next hour or so?” That was my first indication. Eric’s never free within the hour!

The classic HR meeting showing up on your calendar last minute.

DEADLINE: So, we will not see you showing up in Gen V again?

DEADLINE: There won’t be some sort of suped-up resurrection of your character in Season 5?

DOUMIT: I haven’t been told that. So, I think it’s pretty permanent. (laughs) I think it’s a pretty permanent death.

DEADLINE: Alright, just need to get that out of the way, because these dramatic deaths have a way of being a lost leader sometimes. The Boys' Claudia Doumit Just Shed Light on Vicky Neuman's Motivations

Claudia Doumit often feels like she's in a very exclusive book club. When the cast of Prime Video's hit series The Boys receives the next round of scripts from showrunner Eric Kripke, the group chat goes nuts. You see, they're only given their character's basic arc at the beginning of the season, and more information is drip-fed as filming commences.

"It's so funny because not everyone has read the script at the same time," she tells StyleCaster. "They'll say, 'You won't believe how it ends for you,' so it's really exciting ... Every cast member is so enthralled with what's essentially the next installment in our book club."

Exclusive Interview: Claudia Doumit Reflects on Her Journey with 'The Boys' and Future Projects

PC: It was in those early conversations that Eric talked to you about Victoria's fate. That must put you in an interesting place as an actor, where you want to be in the moment, but you also know what's coming. How were you able to find that balance throughout Season 4? How helpful was it that you thought your character was going to die every season?
Claudia: [laughs] It's actually impossible. It's quite hard because you have to find that balance between knowing your character's eventual fate and remaining ignorant of that in the current scene. I just came to work every day trying to be grateful for the time I had left with these wonderful people, even though that was hard. You just have to focus on what's directly in front of you. She has no idea what's ahead for her. She can have fears and an understanding of what's at stake, but you can never play the end, so I just tried my absolute hardest not to play the results.

PC: There's also such an interesting juxtaposition in Season 4 when it comes to Victoria and that pursuit of power, but with an equal desire to run from it. You brought so much depth and nuance to that. How did you create the space for yourself to explore that contrast?
Claudia: Trauma is the central theme this season, specifically the effects of unhealed trauma. It reveals itself in pretty much every character—whether it's Hughie's relationship with his estranged mother, Annie's struggle with identity, or Kimiko's mental trauma with speaking. Shame is a huge thing for Neuman. At her core, Neuman desires to be normal and human.

She's someone who has lived in the shadows for many years, hiding in deception. We rarely get to see her be completely vulnerable. Her true self has been hidden in the shadows for so long and ultimately rejected, which has resulted in extreme self-loathing ingrained in her psyche.

She carries shame around her identity and her power, which is why she resorts to wearing so many masks. It's almost a survival mechanism at this point. But this season, she finds herself in a position where the pursuit of power becomes so mentally taxing that she detaches emotionally. There's a point midway through the season when she goes into autopilot because it's too much to bear.

The Boys Star Reflects on Their Death Scene: 'There Was No Part of Me That Wasn't Expecting It'

Victoria's demise, "I think, story-wise, it makes sense," Doumit says. "I do believe there are so many other components of this world and this story that need to be told. There was no part of me that wasn't expecting it or wasn't shocked by it."

But understanding the reasoning behind it didn't make saying goodbye to the character or her castmates any easier for Doumit, who joined the series in Season 2, before being promoted to series regular ahead of the third season.

"On the day we were shooting it, it was emotional because I had this realization that I'm not going to be able to play her again, and I'm not going to be able to, like, walk like her again or talk like her again," Doumit shares. "Whenever you're saying farewell to a character that you've loved, it is a grief, in a weird way, because you've got to play it. So throughout the season and throughout shooting, every day, I was like, 'OK, let's do it.' Like, kind of be present with it and just be like, 'Let's go have fun. This is going to be great.'"

‘The Boys’ Claudia Doumit Is Having “So Much Fun” Playing On-Screen Enemies With Her Off-Screen Boyfriend Jack Quaid: “It’s Almost Hard Not To Laugh”

On the show, it’s revealed that Victoria’s been hiding her super abilities and the fact that she was adopted as a child by Vought CEO Stan Edgar as she tries to advance her political career. She may publicly pose as an anti-superhero progressive, but she secretly uses her head-popping superpowers to her own advantage. The betrayal of learning about her powers in Season 3 put Hughie and Victoria at opposite sides of the battle, despite their history.

“Now all bets are off, and and they’re having very brutally honest conversations with each other. Claudia Doumit returns to The Boys ready and more than willing to take her character to the next level.

Australian actress Claudia Doumit caught everyone's attention when she joined the cast of Amazon Prime's The Boys for its second season. Before appearing in Eric Kripke's latest endeavor, Doumit was a regular on his series Timeless which aired on NBC. She can also be seen in Netflix's Dude and Annapurna Pictures' Where'd You Go, Bernadette. But it was her portrayal of the up-and-coming, anti-hero politician Victoria Neuman that quickly cemented her as a fan favorite, especially when the finale revealed that her character had powers herself. Luckily for fans, the renewal of the hit superhero show meant a chance to get a deeper look into the character's past and present. An opportunity Claudia was more than ready for.

The newest season of the Emmy-nominated series returned to the streaming service bigger (read gorier) and better than ever. But the dialled-up intensity was matched by a growth in the emotional depth of the characters leaving viewers unable to look away even though they may have wanted to. For Claudia Doumit's multifaceted Victoria Neuman this meant delving into her life before politics, her motivations for hiding her powers, and speculation on what she plans to do next. The character is not an easy one to play, but Doumit handles it with natural grace. Speaking with Claudia about her character, felt like listening to someone talk about their friend, making it clear that the actress understands the complicated woman is she portraying and does her best to make sure viewers do as well.

In a conversation full of laughter and giddy excitement, 1883's Sydney Bolen and Claudia Doumit spoke about why the show is so special, how Doumit relates to her character, what superpowers they would have, and more.

August 2022

Congratulations on season three. As of today, it is officially out! How are you feeling?

Great. The show looks amazing. It's absolutely incredible. I'm speechless. I have no idea how they keep churning out incredible season after incredible season. It's been fun to see all the fan reactions.

I think this is my favourite season. Although, I watched a lot of it through my fingers- more than usual. But I loved it.

This season is definitely more graphic. I feel like I watch every season and think "they can't top this. There's no way they can top this" and then they go ahead and do it.

Are you personally a fan of the blood and gore genre that The Boys fits into?

I was raised on that stuff. I grew up watching a lot of blood and gore. It was much to my mother's dismay, but my dad was very much for it. It's insane though because this show is still shocking every time.

I don't think anything comes close to it.

It always goes just one notch above the mark.

Or a few. [both laugh] Going back to season two, one of the final big reveals is your character is "the head popper." Did you know the whole time, or did you find out gradually, like the audience?

I had no idea I had superpowers until I got that script.

Did that change your approach to the character?

Yes, but it was also incredibly helpful because as an actor I didn't have to work against knowing that about Neuman. I was just playing the character as I thought she was planned out to be. Getting that nice little surprise at the end was a really fun gift.

The Boys* is not very black and white in terms of heroes and villains. How would you characterize Victoria?

I'm always wary of using the word villain in any context, and these characters, as you said, do exist in this morally gray area. I think that the beauty of these characters is that no one is clean-cut or black or white. Everyone exists in this weird sphere where what is right and what is wrong constantly comes into question. I think Neuman can't afford to see good or bad, especially this season. I think the decisions she makes fall more into the category of necessary.

That's a good way to put it. Season 3 gets more into her individual story. One thing I think it's very unique about the character is that she is a mother. How do you think this role affects who she is and how she looks at the world of The Boys?

I think it plays a huge role in her perspective and how she moves throughout this series. We especially see that in the season. Last season she was presented as this unassuming politician coming onto the scene before we got that twist at the end. This season, seeing Victoria as a mother humanizes her actions. Getting a nice dive into her personal life highlights her vulnerabilities and the motives she has, including the fierce protection she has for her daughter. As an actor, that's where I get to see the justification for a lot of her actions. She does make two hefty sacrifices, one of them being her daughter, which I think is a very difficult moment for her. I think that kills a bit of Neuman's humanity. It's a harsh choice she has to make. But ultimately, she doesn't have the luxury of seeing that as good or bad. As a mother, she sees it as a necessary decision to keep her daughter safe.

It was a really powerful moment for your character. It sobers the episode.

It's a hard moment. It's a really soul-crushing moment, but it is necessary.

If you could give Neuman one piece of advice for this season, what would it be?

I would tell her it's like a band-aid. You've just got to rip it off. It'll hurt for a second. But you've got to do it.

I was excited for the show to explore, for however long it did, the relationship between her and Hughie. Especially knowing what the audience knows and what Hughie does not know. Do you think Victoria acted differently around Hughie than she did around other people because of who he was and who he was connected to?

100%. I think Neuman is a very duplicitous character. She is a woman of many masks, and she adjusts those masks depending on who she's interacting with. The way that she talks to Hughie is going to be vastly different from the way that she has a conversation with Homelander or Starlight because, in every conversation that Neuman has, which is one of the most exciting things to do as an actor, she assesses the other person's desires and needs and adjusts her approach according to that to gain that person's trust. She's very strategic.

As an actor, you kind of get to play a bunch of smaller roles in one.

It's endlessly exciting! It's so much fun to do. Whenever I get a script, and I'm reading through it, I think, "Oh, she's talking to this person! How she would interact with them."

[both laugh] The Boys is the second show you've been in that's been written or created by Eric Kripke. You were also in Timeless. Out of Victoria and Jiya, who do you personally relate to more?

Oh, who do I relate to more? if I say Neuman, I sound like an insane person!

[laughs] No! I like her. She's a really cool character.

Look, I don't relate to Neuman in the head-popping sense. But, I relate to her in – it's a very exaggerated version, what she does on the show, but – the idea of having to put on a face in certain social situations. I think we all relate to that a bit. Where we're like, "alright, I'm going to this event. I have to put on this face" or "I'm talking with this person. Now, I have to put this face on." I think that's a very human feeling wrapped up in a superhero show.

Which is one of the things that's so great about The Boys. It exaggerates everything, but in a way that keeps it relatable.

It does. I was joking around the other day and I said The Boys is just modern-day Shakespeare. Because there are such exaggerated ideas and these heightened characters but they're expressing such deeply human emotions and issues. You know? Sure there's a giant penis but –

There are a couple of those [both chuckle].

But, we're also dealing with power, fear, loss, love, heartbreak struggle, and all of those things that just create deeply human moments.

That's honestly what keeps me coming back, those moments. You were able to do in-person press again for the season, for you how does being able to physically be with some of the cast add to the excitement for the release?

It was so exciting. I really enjoyed being in a room with another person. It was so great to be able to be excited about the show and talk about it with that person right in front of you. It's just another added layer of excitement for the season. It's a blast. I enjoyed every minute of it.

I'm excited to see what people think. The Boys is a show that I usually watch with my friends. But, this time I got to watch the whole season early, so I'm ready to see their reactions to certain things.

In Paris, we had a screening, so we got to watch the first episode with a fresh audience.

Oh, fun!

It was so great to hear everyone's reactions to each great, fucked up moment. It was so much fun to watch it on this huge screen but to just hear and see everyone else watch it added to the experience. It was amazing.

I'm sure. To end on a lighter note, if you could take compound V and get a superpower what would it be and why?

Teleportation because I live in Los Angeles and my family is in Sydney, Australia. That 14-hour flight is murder.

[both laugh]

So, if I could snap my fingers and be in Australia that would save me a lot of time and keep me from losing my mind.

That's an easy one and for good reason. If I could know beforehand what my superpower was and I liked it, I would probably take Compound V, but if not, I wouldn't.

Yeah, because you could get a really bad one.

I know!

What would you take it for?

Something travel related. It doesn't have to be teleportation, but getting places faster would be nice.

See, we're saving the environment because we're not taking planes.

[both laugh] Yeah, exactly.

‘The Boys’ Star Claudia Doumit Discusses the Fake Blood Shortage and Epic Backgammon Rivalry on Set (Video)

The Boys' Claudia Doumit Mulls If Victoria Could Kill Homelander, Teases 'Shocking' and 'Heartbreaking' Finale

As Congresswoman Victoria Neuman, Claudia Doumit's alter ego on The Boys has formed an uneasy alliance with Homelander — but the actress could have been walking alongside the supe inside the halls of Vought Tower as a very different character.

Doumit — who worked with The Boys showrunner Eric Kripke on NBC's Timeless — auditioned in Season 1 for the role of Vought International Director of Talent Relations Ashley Barrett, a part that ultimately went to actress Colby Minifie.

"I originally came in [to read] in the first season, didn't do a good job, and when the casting came for the second season, I just remember telling myself like, 'Don't worry about it. You probably won't get it,'" Doumit tells TVLine. "I remember just setting really low expectations for myself. So I was incredibly happy when I got the gig because Neuman is such a great character, and I've loved every minute of playing her. It just worked out for the best that I didn't get cast originally in that first season because I think Neuman is far more my speed."

The Boys: Claudia Doumit on AOC Comparisons and What Season 3 Decision Shocked Her the Most

Claudia Doumit may not be sure what fate awaits her character after The Boys Season 3, but she's doing her homework. "I've definitely gone down the rabbit hole of watching endless videos of politicians at rallies and giving speeches and how they hold themselves in a room and what their hand placement is," she tells Consequence via phone. "It's very specific, it's a very nuanced movement. One hand movement communicates something, then another hand movement communicates something entirely different."

It's valuable preparation for the character of Congresswoman Victoria Neuman, who we first meet as a young, idealistic politician in Season 2 of the ultraviolent superhero satire, before learning at the end of the season that she not only has superpowers — she's been using them to explode peoples' heads for quite some time. Season 3 delivered a ton of fresh backstory as well for her character, revealing how after becoming an orphan, she was taken in by Vought CEO Stan Edgar (Giancarlo Esposito), who guided her towards her political future, which is looking pretty bright.

Claudia Doumit Reveals What It Was Like Working With Eric Kripke Again On The Boys - Exclusive

BY XANDRA HARBET / JUNE 24, 2022 2:50 PM EDT

Claudia Doumit's Victoria Neuman gave "The Boys" fans quite a shock during the Season 2 reveal that the seemingly empathetic and progressive politician is actually the head popper. Yet her addition to the show isn't the first time she's worked with series creator Eric Kripke. The showrunner loves pulling from his pool of talented actors that he's worked with — like "Supernatural" stars Jensen Ackles (Soldier Boy) and Jim Beaver (Robert Singer).

The Boys Interview: Chace Crawford & Claudia Doumit

I had the pleasure of doing an interview with Chace Crawford, who plays the chronically insecure, The Deep in The Boys, and Claudia Doumit, who plays congresswoman Victoria Neuman, who is also hiding her own little supes secret. They were both lovely during our chat as I asked them about their character's development this season and they also told me about the stages of grief they go through whenever they read some of the strange things they have to do after receiving their scripts.

The Boys' Claudia Doumit Reveals When She Learned About Big Twist

By CHARLIE RIDGELY - October 20, 2020 01:06 pm EDT

The second season of The Boys has sadly come to a close, but the final episodes of the installment certainly weren't without their surprises. Perhaps the most shocking reveal of all (which is saying a lot with this show) is that Congresswoman Victoria Neuman has actually been a Supe in disguise the entire time. While seemingly working to take down Vaught, Victoria had her own agenda, and she was the one behind all of the exploding heads throughout the season.

Victoria's secret identity twist was a major surprise to fans, but it was just as surprising to the actress who played the character. The Boys star Claudia Doumit recently sat down with ComicBook.com's own Matt Aguilar to break down the ending of Season 2, and revealed that she wasn't told about the twist until that script came in.

BIOGRAPHY

A dynamic and striking actress with a gift for effortlessly moving between appearances in critically acclaimed projects, Claudia Doumit most recently starred in Amazon's Emmy-nominated series THE BOYS.

Claudia opened up the highly anticipated Season 4 in June 2024. Her character "Victoria Neuman," the Vice-Presidential candidate, quickly become a fan favorite on the hit series. The show has become engrained in the pop culture zeitgeist and her character's plot twist was called "maybe the craziest thing The Boys has ever done," and "Season 4 delivers mass quantities of wild plot turns and nerve-blistering suspense."

The Australian actress of Lebanese and Italian descent previously played time traveler "Jiya" on NBC's popular series TIMELESS, created by Shawn Ryan and Eric Kripke.

In film, Claudia has appeared in Annapurna Pictures' WHERE'D YOU GO, BERNADETTE with Cate Blanchett, directed by Richard Linklater, and Netflix's DUDE with Lucy Hale and Awkwafina, directed by Olivia Milch. Claudia also headlined and produced the indie film DYLAN & ZOEY IN 2022.

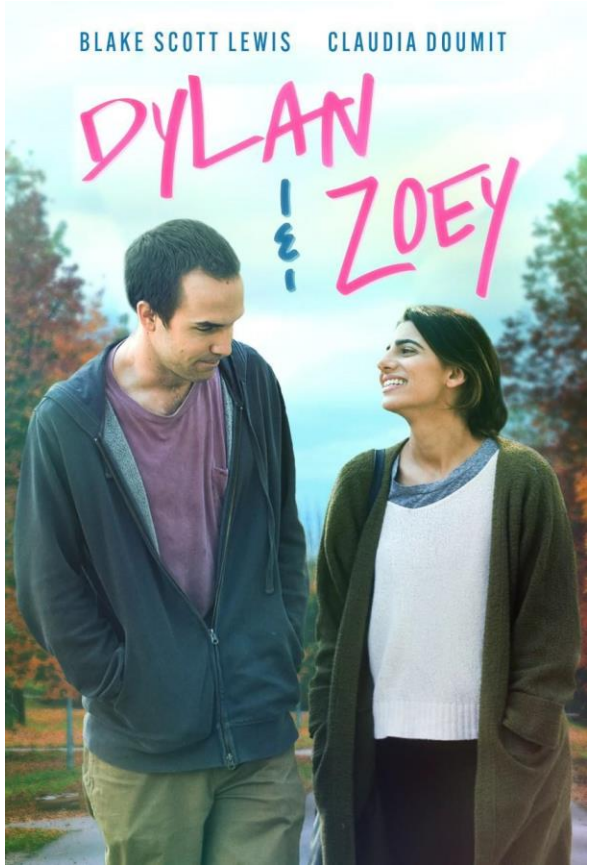

She is the first female Middle Eastern lead of the CALL OF DUTY franchises titled "Modern Warfare" and "Mastodon."

Claudia was nominated for a LA Ovation Award for her performance in Ammunition Theatre Company's original production of A GIANT VOID IN MY SOUL. An ABC Comedy Diversity Showcase Alum, Claudia studied at the prestigious Stella Adler School of Acting Conservatory and the Scott Sedita Acting Studios in Los Angeles.

Claudia is based in Los Angeles and repped by Kanica Suy of Cultivate Entertainment; N. Hayes Robbins at Goodman, Genow, Schenkman, Smelkinson & Christopher; and Origin PR.
